

Relationship between the child with ADHD the family environment: A systematic review

Celia Gallardo Herrerías
University of Almería, Almería, Spain
<https://orcid.org/0000-0001-5515-1269>

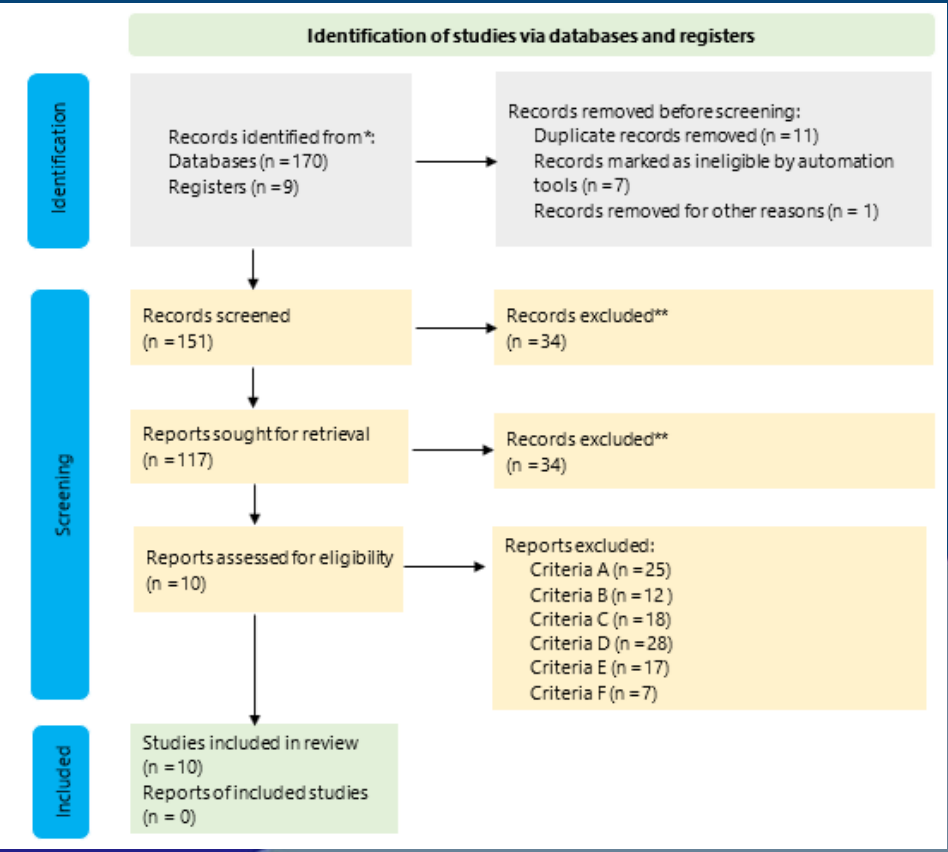

Introduction

The present study focuses on understanding the possible interdependence between an ADHD diagnosis and the family members' response to it.

Method

The methodological design is that of a systematic review following the PRISMA protocol.

Results

The selected studies show a clear tendency to experience negative emotionality, leading to permissive and/or authoritarian parenting styles.

Conclusions

An increase in clinical symptomatology in the child affected by ADHD and acts as a cyclic influx of unwanted feelings and behaviors

